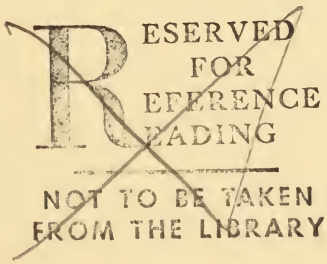
James Warley Miles

Reprinted from the only surviving copy of the Charleston edition of 1854, with introductory and biographical notes by George Walton Williams

DALCHO HISTORICAL SOCIETY
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA PRESS
CHARLOTTESVILLE, VIRGINIA



Produced by the University of Virginia Press in 1955, in an edition of 300 copies, for the Dalcho Historical Society of the Diocese of South Carolina and the Tracy W. McGregor Library of the University of Virginia.

INTRODUCTION

THE catalogue here reproduced was prepared for the sale of the library of the Rev. James Warley Miles in 1854. It is one of the earliest extant sales catalogues from any Southern state and one of the few pre-Civil War catalogues of the South. It is similarly one of the earliest and most remarkable listings of Oriental texts by an American student. It has for these reasons considerable historic interest, but it has additional interest as the representation of the personality of a scholarly collector.

It was said at the time of his death that Miles understood between thirty and forty languages, and a glance at the number and variety of foreign language texts in the catalogue will bear out the figures. Prominent among the languages represented is the Oriental group, with 154 titles in Section I. Miles' proficiency and interest in a language regulated the number and proportion of grammars, lexicons, and literary texts in the collection. One notable item in the library is William Jones' Grammar of the Persian Language (London, 1775; first edition), the pioneering Occidental study of Oriental linguistics.

Miles' taste for "Patristics, and its kindred, Ecclesiastical History" and his inclinations toward general history, philosophy, and homiletics are indicated throughout the library. The Greek and Latin sections are particularly full: the Greek containing individual texts of many writers, the Latin listing a few individual texts and 136 volumes of the Valpy Classics that include almost all classical authors. Conspicuous by its absence is English literature; one is surprised to find a paucity of volumes and a curious selection of authors. The sections devoted to works in modern European languages would suggest that Miles read these languages easily.

The character of the library, however, is rendered fully in the catalogue reproduced in the following pages. The collection of every book collector reflects by definition his personality more than his environment; it is in some respects, indeed, a defiance of his environment that prompts him to make his collection, to cover the walls of his study with the symbols of other worlds. So did Miles transplant the Orient to Carolina, causing the shelves of his little study to represent realms far off in time and space. To this extent, his library is not characteristic of his locale or his period; it is peculiarly his own. To us, inquisitive a century later, the books represent not the library of an educated and travelled Charlestonian, not the relic of outmoded theories or primitive linguistic studies, so much as they do the wan, ascetic, and erudite student, steeped in metaphysics and in Oriental philology and philosophy. They provide thus an intimate insight into the particular mind and personality of their collector.

B. Greek.

510 Æschylus and Sophocles. Ahrens. (Didot's Biblioth. Græc.) 1 vol. royal 8vo. Paris 1842

The excellency and accuracy of the editions in Didot's Bibliotheca Græca are established in Europe. The editors are known to be scholars of recognized authority, and hence we have not always been particular in inserting their names, a reference to the Biblioth. being sufficient guarantee for the edition. All of the volumes in this part of our catalogue, referred to Didot's Bibliotheca Græca, are elegantly bound.

[A supplement, subsequently published, is wanting to the above; the volume contains all the extant plays complete, and all the fragments of Æschylus.]

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

JAMES Warley Miles was born November 24, 1818, in St. Matthew's Parish, South Carolina. He was educated at the Willington Academy, Abbeville District, and at the South Carolina College. He left college before graduating, read law for a short time, and entered the General Theological Seminary in 1839. While at Seminary he evidenced his missionary zeal by originating the movement to establish a religious house in the West, now the Nashotah House Seminary in Wisconsin. His interests in Oriental studies, Patristics, and Ecclesiastical History were also stimulated, and he admitted that he read in addition to Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, "Arabic . . . without much difficulty . . . and . . . Chaldaic."

After his graduation in 1841, he returned to his native diocese as parish priest but resigned his charge in 1843 in order to accompany the Rev. Horatio Southgate in the mission to Mesopotamia and two years later to Constantinople. In 1847 probably for reasons of health, Miles concluded his missionary work, returned to South Carolina, and resumed his parish service. His sermons delivered in the summer of 1849 at St.

Michael's Church, Charleston, he collected and published under the title Philosophic Theology: Or Ultimate Grounds of All Religious Belief Based in Reason.

Parochial duty was apparently not much to his liking, for in 1850 he accepted the chair of the History of Intellectual Philosophy and Greek Literature at the College of Charleston. He occupied this professorship until 1854, when he was advised to travel in Europe to regain his failing health. But the Trustees of the College were anxious to secure Miles' services again, and in 1856 they offered him the position of Librarian. Miles returned from Europe to accept the appointment, one entirely to his liking. "My highest ambition as to place," he had written, "is a situation with access to books . . . where my work will lie in the study."

He would probably have remained in this office for the rest of his life had not the Civil War interrupted his career. The College was closed in 1863, and the books of the Library were crated and shipped away from Charleston. When the College reopened in 1865, Miles was recalled as professor of Ancient Languages.

In 1871 he retired from active teaching and occupied himself with his studies and with occasional addresses and sermons, assisting his fellow-clergymen. His mind was active and alert up to the time of his death on September 14, 1875; not many weeks earlier, a friend visiting him had found him sitting up in his bed contentedly reading a poem in Sanskrit.

In order to defray the expenses of his European tour in 1854, Miles was obliged to offer his library—his most prized possession—for sale. The Charleston Mercury of March 8 in noticing the auction observed that the collection had been made "with great care by a gentleman of this city." K. R. Wagner, the auctioneer, advertised: "A valuable collection of BOOKS embracing a variety of Standard Works, in all departments of Literature; they are of the best editions . . . handsomely bound, and in good order . . . The Books will be open for inspection the day previous to the sale, at which time Catalogues may be procured. Conditions cash."

The story of the auction was told by Miles in his first report as Librarian to the Trustees in 1857:

> Your Board is probably aware of the fact that when I went to Europe my private Library was for sale. Instead of receiving, as I had expected, the accounts of the disposal of the books, I learned with agreeable surprise that the Library would not be broken but be purchased in mass, and the funds so accruing be placed at my command. It is always to be regretted when the private Library of a student is dissipated, for his special pursuits cause him to bring together works which constitute an apparatus not easily collected otherwise. It was, therefore, with pleasure that I learned the fact that my Library had been so disposed of as to prevent its being sold in fragments.
> But you cannot, gentlemen, easily conceive my emotions at finding upon my return the old companions and instructors of many a delightful and many a laborious hour of study, all in their accustomed places, greeting me with their familiar aspect and telling with eloquence, though silent yet more moving than words, a tale of generosity, sympathy, and delicate attention, which awakened in me feelings of gratitude and admiration I should in vain endeavor to express. This, then, was the secret of my Library having been purchased in mass—not to be placed in some collection or institution but to surprise and greet its possessor in his accustomed haunts.

With the delicacy of true generosity, this noble act was so performed that I am ignorant of the friends who have laid me under so grateful an obligation. I only know from the act itself that very many true hearts among us must beat with intelligent and disinterested sympathy for the student's labors and aspirations. No words of mine could add to the conscious reward of satisfaction which the performance of such an act and in such a manner must bestow upon those who were capable of having conceived and executed it. But as the only mode left open to me of expressing my gratitude is the endeavor to correspond to the liberal motives which prompted the act, I respectfully ask permission of your Board to deposit my collection of books in the College Library to be used by students and lovers of learning upon the same footing as the books of the Library. I do not know how better to respond to the feelings of those who have manifested such noble, generous and appreciative sympathy for the pursuits of a humble student than by endeavoring to extend in the most feasible manner to all students in our community whatever advantages may be derived from the consultation of a collection preserved from dissipation by an act as noble and praiseworthy as it is generous and unusual.

Though Miles never knew who was responsible for the purchase of his library, it is generally thought now that William Gilmore Simms, a close friend, was one of those most interested in the matter.

The collection of books was admitted to the shelves of the College Library by the Trustees. It was removed during the Civil War and after Miles' death was presented to the College by his brothers. The collection is marked with a simple bookplate and is still maintained as a unit in the Library of the College.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

The reproduction of this catalogue was made from the unique exemplar in the Library of the College of Charleston with the gracious permission of the Librarian.

Miles' report to the Trustees is quoted verbatim, but some changes have been made in the punctuation.
